Who are Public Health Workers?

Public health workers help keep whole communities healthy. They work to prevent diseases before people get sick. They help organize vaccination clinics, teach families about staying healthy, track outbreaks, and make sure clean water and safe food are available. Instead of treating just one patient at a time, they protect many people at once.

Would you rather...

If you were a public health worker, would you rather organize a vaccination clinic to protect your whole community, or investigate how a sickness is spreading so you can help stop it?
